Heritage outcomes of the Place
Planning process

- 1. Recognition of the area's complex history.
- 2. Identification of the area's heritage assets.
- 3. Recommendations for strengthening the protection of those assets.

Next steps – Statutory planning

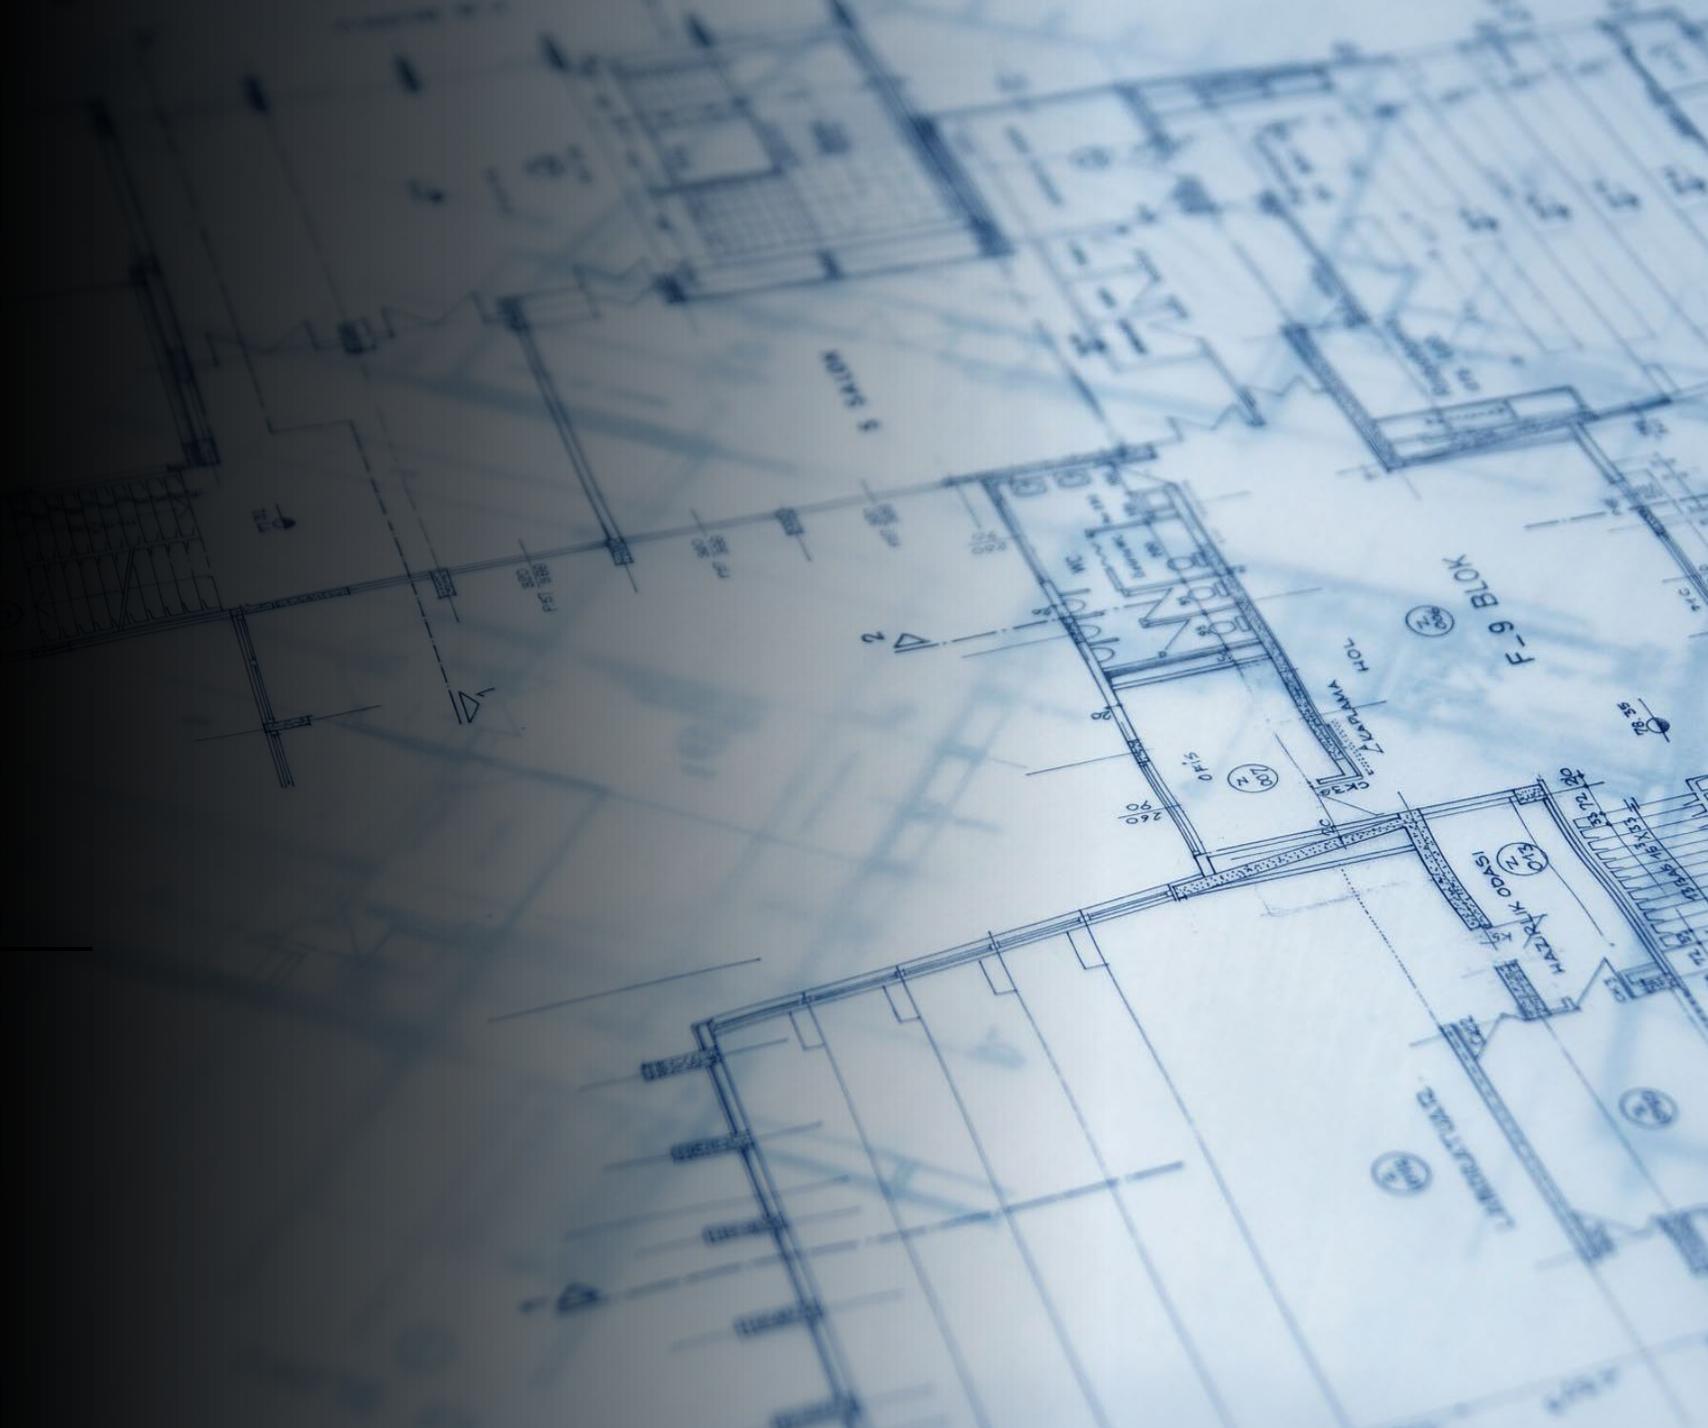

First up for redevelopment is the Causeway housing area.

A Draft Territory Plan Amendment is currently with the Minister for approval.

Draft Territory Plan amendments

What is proposed for the Causeway area?

Causeway Hall

“Building heights vary across the site to create visually and architecturally interesting streetscapes and building form and scale of development which enhances the heritage significance of the Causeway Hall and its open space setting within and surrounding Section 35 Kingston.”

The Limestone Outcrop

The Territory Planning Authority advised that:

“Investigation of the fossil site has been prepared for the ACT Heritage Council for further consideration prior to any future development application.”

Cargill's Cottage

The Draft Territory Plan Amendment states that the TPA is of the view that:

“Cargill’s Cottage is considered to have non-significant heritage value and nomination to the ACT Heritage Council is not proposed.”

Causeway archaeological remnants

The Territory Planning Authority advised that:

‘An Archaeological Assessment is currently being prepared for the site. Results of the investigation will be considered to inform future development.’

Conclusions?

- The Place Planning process is valuable for assessing an area's heritage values.
- However, there is no guarantee that statutory planning processes will accept the recommendations of professional heritage assessments.
- The material gathered during the Place Planning process provides a valuable resource for use at subsequent stages in the planning process e.g. development applications.
